

The Olga Lengyel Institute for Holocaust Studies and Human Rights

The Holocaust, Human Rights, & The Role of Education

An interdisciplinary inquiry on teaching the Holocaust, human rights, and social justice

June 23-June 28, 2019

Salisbury University

About the Seminar

The Maryland Holocaust Educators Network (MD-HEN) gathers teachers from across the mid-Atlantic region to study the Holocaust and genocide in a context of civil rights and social justice. We will witness, study, and collaborate together to invigorate our teaching. MD-HEN is funded by the Olga Lengyel Institute for Holocaust Studies and Human Rights, a foundation established through the bequest of Holocaust survivor Olga Lengyel, and housed at the Memorial Library in New York City.

WHO?

20 teachers from all disciplines, middle school-university level, will be accepted through a competitive application process. Teachers may apply as individuals or as team members and may represent public, private, and charter schools throughout the mid-Atlantic region.

WHEN?

The seminar begins on the evening of Sunday, June 23, 2019 with an opening reception. The seminar will end on Friday afternoon, June 28.

COST?

This week-long seminar is free to teachers! You will receive all books and materials, workshops and seminars, field trip transportation, special events, and most meals. Housing scholarships will be available on the Salisbury University campus. Graduate tuition is not included.

CREDIT?

Both Maryland CPD credit and Salisbury University graduate credit will be available to interested educators. Selected educators will be informed of their options at the time of acceptance. Normal tuition and fees will apply and are the student's responsibility.

SEMINAR LEADERS

Diana Wagner is a two-time Memorial Library Fellow, two-time Fellow of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, and Director of MD-HEN at Salisbury University. Dr. Wagner's social justice work spans the areas of GLBTQ equity, school climate, responding to hate crimes, and Holocaust and genocide education.

Alexander Pope is a two-time Memorial Library Fellow, a Fellow of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, and co-director of MD-HEN at Salisbury University. Dr. Pope is interested in all areas of civic engagement, but particularly the ways in which students and teachers come to see themselves as change-agents in their communities.
